

Tyler DiFiore

What it means to be a BC Eagle...

While there are many elements that make Boston College a great place to learn and grow, its courses and culture are particularly formative. BC breeds a culture of introspection, which I realized most visibly in my first couple years at school. Courses like Courage to Know and PULSE, coupled with extracurricular events such as Agape Latte talks, get students thinking about larger issues, both concrete and spiritual. These four years have trained me to pursue impact and meaning, which is something I hope to carry with me throughout my life. This is why I am interning at the Office of Sustainability. Through my classes studying Economics and Political Science, I have come to understand climate change as an issue that will impact all of us. It is a problem that must be tackled in order to conserve our current lifestyle for generations to come. I am excited to engage in this work, and while challenging, I enjoy engaging in solutions that can beautify the world around us and as well as improve quality of life. BC has provided me the space to grow as a person and guide me toward a fulfilling career.